

The North American Soccer League

1974

THE 1974 season brought major expansion to the North American Soccer League. The League increased from nine to 15 teams with the addition of clubs in Baltimore, Boston, Denver, Los Angeles, San Jose, Seattle, Vancouver and Washington. However, along the way the NASL lost its franchises in Atlanta and Montreal.

Operating with the 15 teams in four equal divisions, the NASL continued to play with a 35-yard offside line and, in addition, introduced a penalty-kick shoot-out to decide tie games.

If the teams were tied after 90 minutes play, the outcome of the game was decided by taking penalty-kicks. However, the winning team was awarded only three points for the win instead of the six for a victory in regulation time. NASL teams were still being awarded a point for every goal scored up to three.

In the end, the penalty-kick rule decided the championship. In an exciting Final played at the Orange Bowl in Miami, the Los Angeles Aztecs and the Miami Toros were tied 3-3 at the end of regulation time. The Aztecs won the ensuing penalty-kick contest.

Games which ended in a penalty-kick shoot-out are noted with an asterisk (*) in the team records.

Fryatt's overall English career saw him score 189 goals in 489 Football League games.
