1. The first part of the paper discusses the importance of understanding the cultural context of the research. It highlights how different cultures may have varying interpretations of what constitutes a "good life" or "well-being". This section also touches upon the challenges researchers face when trying to apply Western theories of well-being to non-Western contexts.

2. The second part of the paper focuses on the methodology used in the study. It describes the process of selecting participants from various cultural backgrounds and the methods used to collect data. The authors emphasize the need for transparency in reporting the limitations of the study and the steps taken to minimize bias.

3. The third part presents the findings of the study. It shows that while there are some common themes across cultures, such as the importance of family and community, there are also significant differences in how these values are prioritized and expressed. The authors provide examples of specific cultural practices and beliefs that influence well-being.

4. Finally, the paper concludes by discussing the implications of the findings for future research and policy-making. It suggests that a more nuanced and culturally sensitive approach is needed to understand and promote well-being globally. The authors call for further exploration of the role of culture in shaping individual and societal values.

NASL soccer was often played in baseball stadiums. Here Baltimore goalkeeper Carmelo Sedrun collects a high ball. Others are Baltimore defenders 'Gaucho' Tejada (16) and David Primo (4) and the dark-shirted Detroit forward Barry Rowan. Note the dirt of the baseball paths contrasting with the grass of the outfield.

Stadium: Turnpike Stadium and Cotton Bowl, Dallas, Texas.

Dallas Tornado used five goalkeepers in 1968. Perhaps the most experienced of them, despite the fact that he managed only eight NASL games that year, was Terry Adlington with 184 appearances in the English Football League. He was born in Derbyshire, England, in November 1935 and began his career in local amateur football before signing for Derby County in 1955. Adlington's chances of first-team football were restricted at Derby. After being transferred to Torquay United in May 1962, for £1,000, his career blossomed and he made 148 League appearances for them. Adlington made 26 appearances for Baltimore Bays when they won the Eastern Division of the National Professional Soccer League in 1967. He also appeared in both Championship games against Oakland Clippers, when Baltimore lost 4-2 on aggregate.
