

F.A. CUP 1975-76

The pattern of events in the 1975-76 FA Cup competition were to revive, inevitably, brisk discussion on the advisability of a 'seeded' draw: certainly, if the pairing of clubs had been manipulated as some suggested the casualty rate among the famous would have been avoided. But then we should not have been left with a final that went so tantalisingly against all probability.

Manchester United and Southampton arrived at Wembley by vastly different routes. United, youthful, aggressive, and proponents of a new school of attack, had leapt excitingly from peak to peak, often in peril, it seemed, but sure-footed enough to maintain momentum.

They had been a goal down against Oxford in the third round, and needed two Daly penalties to pass on. Good matches with Peterborough and Leicester carried them to the sixth round, and a match with Wolves. The first clash, at Old Trafford, was drawn. In the replay Wolves fashioned two goals out of their great past - long passes to the wings, hard centres then driven home - to take what seemed a secure lead. Now United were tested to the limit, and triumphed. Pearson, Greenhoff, and McIlroy scored to reward football that was all about resilience, belief, and adventure.

United's next match, against Derby in the semi-final, was many watcher's idea of the 'real' climax of this cup. These were the two best sides left in, this would have been a magnetic match for Wembley. United, giving years away to Derby in experience, seemed least fancied, but their victory was never in doubt. Brash and aggressive, totally unflurried by the occasion, they never allowed Derby's maturity to count. Two goals by Hill saw them through.

How much less spectacular had been Southampton's route among the foothills of the competition. Their only top-class opposition came from Aston Villa in the third round. A minute of so from time, despite being at home, Southampton were a goal down. Then Fisher struck to earn them a replay, and they went on to a well-worked victory at Villa Park. Blackpool fell next - no great feat perhaps. Then West Bromwich were defeated at the second attempt, with Channon's three-goal contribution quite vital.

In the sixth round the improbable opposition of little Bradford City loomed up and was disposed of, but only by a single goal. Crystal Palace, a Third Division side whose Cup run was to cost them promotion (and, ultimately, their manager) slid through to confront them in the semi-final, and by most fans' reckoning were fancied to win. Palace, with Malcolm Allison's showmanship evident, looked to have the greater flair. Southampton, with Lawrie McMenemy maintaining the club's low profile, said little and promised nothing. But on the day their steady application did the talking for them, and Gilchrist and Peach (a penalty) took them through.

As Wembley neared, few living outside Southampton's enclave on the South Coast gave them a chance. How could you make a case for a club that had done nothing in the Cup since antiquity against the drive of United's talented youngsters, still in with a chance, remember, of a Cup and League double? The answer was that, unless you sought comfort in the knowledge of men like Rodrigues, Blyth, Steele, McCalliog and Osgood, you couldn't.

In fact, during the week of the match, most neutrals were looking back along the path of the competition, puzzled still by the absence of more suitable opponents for the overwhelming favourites, Manchester. Where had all the big clubs gone?

Their remains could be seen littering the route to Wembley from the third round on. All four London First Division clubs went out at that first hurdle, all beaten by their First Division peers. Liverpool and later Everton and Newcastle fell to Derby, Spurs and Manchester City to Stoke, Arsenal and Ipswich were gobbled by Wolves. Giant-killers, though Bradford City beat Norwich, and Palace, incredibly, beat Leeds, were hardly needed - the giants were killing themselves. At least eight non-First Division sides were suddenly, improbably, guaranteed a place in the last 16.

So that explains how Southampton got to the final, but it doesn't account for what happened then. The way most people previewed the match, Manchester United's momentum, once established, would overwhelm Southampton as it had so many teams before. Probably that was true. What Southampton achieved, in effect, was not to survive that momentum, but rather to prevent it from beginning.

Good tackling, and quietly alert concentration on cover by their defence kept United in low gear. Southampton picked their moments to attack, then, when foiled, trotted swiftly back to regroup. Manchester's bright hope, winger Hill, disappointing on the day as to be substituted in the second half, saw little of the ball. Not because United didn't try to find him, not because his marker, Rodrigues, stamped him out, but because Southampton quietly interposed the nearest available forward between him and the pass. It was beautifully done, and such small tactical sums added up to a huge strategic advantage.

United, especially towards the end of the first half, and again deep into the second 45 minutes, shrugged free of the constraint and began to play. But all too soon McCalliog and, especially, Steele and Holmes, would bite into their rhythm, making it falter and stop.

It was never as dull as deadlock, for the quality of men like McIlroy and, persistently, Coppell, shone enough to maintain promise. It was never as sterile as stalemate, for there was an edge about Southampton's advances on the heels of Channon's running and Osgood's dribble, that kept attention alert. And seven minutes from time Bobby Stokes, among the least famous on this field, ran purposefully to McCalliog's shrewd pass and half-hit the winning goal beyond Stepney's dive. Southampton's fans boiled over, United's stood glum - but then they'd hardly been in full voice all day.

When Lawrie McMenemy recalled his words to his team: 'Never mind if the Queen is watching, if there's danger, belt the ball into the Tyne,' some felt he was confessing to a crime, in having reduced the final to a matter of football mathematics. That is too narrow a view: there is no obligation on any finalist team to play a match at the opposition's preferred tempo, no requirement to throw aside your own merits to provide neutrals with confirmation of their hopes. Southampton, of the Second Division, played to their limit, and prevented United from reaching theirs: The 1975-76 FA Cup honours went to an honest team, if not a great one.
