

The North American Soccer League

1978

A TOTAL of 24 teams made up the North American Soccer League in 1978, an increase of six from the previous year. Newcomers included California Surf, Colorado Caribous, Detroit Express, Houston Hurricane, Memphis Rogues, New England Tea Men, Oakland Stompers, Philadelphia Fury, San Diego Sockers and Tulsa Roughnecks. However, once again a number of teams fell by the wayside. They were: Connecticut Bi-Centennials, Team Hawaii, Las Vegas Quicksilver and, sadly, the St Louis Stars who had been members continuously since the League began.

In effect the St Louis franchise moved to Anaheim, California, to become California Surf, Team Hawaii moved to Oklahoma to become Tulsa Roughnecks and Las Vegas Quicksilver crossed the mountains from Nevada to California to become the third franchise to locate in San Diego.

The 24 teams were divided into two conferences with each conference comprising three equal divisions. The NASL retained its 35-yard lines and sudden-death overtime in the event of a tie, followed by the shoot-out if necessary. Games ending in sudden-death overtime are noted by a (+) in the club records and those in a shoot out by an asterisk (*).

Players from all over the world joined NASL clubs in ever increasing numbers. Among them Vladislav Bogicevic from Yugoslavia, whose presence in midfield made New York Cosmos even stronger. English international forward Dennis Tueart also signed for Cosmos, while Trevor Francis played for Detroit and Alan Ball for Philadelphia. George Graham, later to manage Arsenal, played for California Surf and Manuel Velazquez, captain of Real Madrid, signed for Toronto Metros-Croatia.
