

Review of the Scottish Season

As I drove to Dundee I was musing about the essential unfairness of life: here were Aberdeen, considered by many the most complete, formidable and exciting team in the country, about to complete the season without any tangible success: in December they had lost the League Cup to Dundee United after a replayed final; a week ago, I had seen them lose in the semi-final of the Cup to a Derek Johnstone goal in a game where both sides had chances; and now Celtic were cruising serenely to another championship, about to add two points to their unassailable lead at the expense of the almost-doomed Dundee.

Two hours later the impossible had happened: Dundee, alas too late for them to survive, had thrashed Celtic 5-1, and the chink of light was visible to Aberdeen. As all know, they took their chance and finished worthy winners of the League title; but for it they have much to thank the Dundee teams who, within a fortnight, fired in eight goals past Latchford and so disturbed the Celtic poise that it was regained only just in time to win the Cup - and thus avoid a bare cupboard.

It was an interesting enough league season, but most questions seemed well settled early. At the lower end of the Premier, Hibs had a dismal time and, even aided on occasion by George Best, never looked like holding their own. Dundee, too, were never comfortable, though they were always in touch until the end of the season, when Kilmarnock and Partick drew quietly out of range. For a long while, Dundee United were in the danger zone, but one never felt seriously that this talented side would end in trouble, and they pulled well clear.

Celtic, for all their large points lead, had not looked world-beaters; they were still young in experience in many ways, and they may well come solidly ahead now, but, albeit with some good European performances to their credit, they were always liable to be inconsistent, and their lead was built up mostly on the inconsistency of others.

Morton were well to the fore for most of the season, leading the league in November, and still holding second place in mid-March; but by then, with five games lost in a row, they had shot their bolt, and they finished well down. None the less, they are a most attractive team, and are to be congratulated on their season.

St Mirren were always liable to win against anyone; their team contained many good players, with a blend of experience and exciting youth; in Doug Somner they had a thrustful player with a hunger for goals, and there were others who knew the way to the net, too. St Mirren were never far away in the challenge, and their success in being the first Scots club to win the Anglo-Scottish Cup was much applauded - at least on this side of the Border.

Hearts, now under a new manager, won the First Division and return to the top, hoping for a longer stay this time. They are still building, and have much to do before they can face the new season with confidence. Airdrie, though they lost to Hearts in the race for the winner's flag, look somehow less brittle; but competition in the Premier division is such that there is little time for a side to settle: points have to be collected from the start.

At the lower end, Clyde, after a moderate start, had a series of bad results in the autumn, and by the end of October were at the foot of the table, a position which they maintained. Arbroath looked likely to join them, but there was hope for them as Berwick, Dunfermline and St Johnstone all faltered; in the end, however, these three all rallied.

Last year Falkirk fluffed their final puts and missed promotion; this season there was no such mistake, and they took the title in style; accompanying them aloft are near-neighbours East Stirling, who, with fine teamwork, held top position for some weeks and foiled several late challengers to gain promotion. Forfar finished in a very creditable third place, after being well down the table at the end of November. In truth, there were few teams who really aspired to higher things in this division - and the attendances were so low at some games that it was difficult to see how some teams could be inspired.

The Bell's League Cup saw some good performances: Hamilton disposed of St Mirren and Dundee in achieving the semi-finals, and Raith almost held Dundee United in the quarter-finals. In the final at Hampden, Aberdeen, who had previously dismissed both Rangers and Celtic, had slightly the better of an interesting goalless exchange; but in the replay at Dens Park, with the pitch slippery and very wet, and a packed house enhancing the occasion, Dundee United's Pettigrew and Sturrock proved too mobile for the heavy Aberdeen rearguard, and Jim McLean's team duly and deservedly won their first major trophy.

The Scottish Cup was notable for the success of Highland League champions Keith, who just lost to Berwick 2-1 in the fourth round after convincing wins in previous rounds; Berwick themselves reached the quarter-finals for the first time and very nearly accounted for Hibs, narrowly losing in the replay. The final was a good confrontation between Rangers and Celtic, a hard good tempered contest which Celtic just won after extra time, leaving Rangers out of Europe and with little to remember from the season; unfortunately the confrontation between a number of the supporters was not at all good-tempered and the appalling scenes after the end of the game once again accented the type of spectators the game can attract and the enormous difficulties of the police, who continue to show the most amazing control of themselves in the most trying circumstances.

Our fortunes in the Home internationals were mixed and left us in considerable doubt about our expectations in the World Cup qualifying matches. Once more, we saw many chances created and not taken, and there could be little to enthuse about in the final game at Hampden, where a workmanlike England looked a lot better on the day, and won in the end convincingly 2-0. If only we could have taken our first-half chances! However, whilst a number of our players looked jaded, and at times out of their depth, there were good performances, none more inspiring than that of Player of the Year Gordon Strachan, who won many admirers from both sides of the Border; but overall it was depressing.

Now Hampden Park is to be restyled and modernized, and work is to start at once. Let us hope that the new and improved national stadium will see a new and improved national team. Meantime, good luck to the present squad and their manager.
