

The North American Soccer League

WHILE the number of teams making up the NASL in 1979 remained at 24 there were two franchise shifts. The Colorado Caribous moved to Atlanta and adopted the old name of the Atlanta Chiefs, while the Oakland Stompers moved to Canada to become the Edmonton Drillers. Ownership of the Toronto franchise changed hands and with it the name changed from Toronto Metros-Croatia to Toronto Blizzard.

League rules and regulations remained much the same as they had in 1978, with the 35-yard lines, sudden-death overtime and shoot-out procedure being retained.

There was, however, a brief players' strike during this season that affected a number of games played on April 14. Although all of the games scheduled were played on that date, a number of teams were affected when regular members refused to dress. In these instances the players were replaced by local players or players recruited from across the country.

New signings included Dutch international superstar Johan Cruyff who went to Los Angeles Aztecs, West German international striker Gerd Müller by Fort Lauderdale Strikers, Swedish defender Bjorn Nordqvist by Minnesota Kicks, English international midfielder Alan Hudson by Seattle Sounders and Manchester United goalkeeper Alex Stepney by Dallas Tornado.

The Vancouver Whitecaps won the 'Soccer Bowl' after upsetting the star studded New York Cosmos in the semi-final.
