

The North American Soccer League

1982

THE North American Soccer League was reduced to 14 teams for the 1982 season as Calgary, California, Los Angeles, Minnesota, Washington and Dallas Tornado, members since the League began, dropped out.

During this season, under pressure from FIFA to conform with international rules, the NASL was forced to drop its 35-yard offside lines, but continued to decide games tied after 90 minutes with sudden-death overtime, followed by a shoot-out if necessary. Another international regulation FIFA insisted on was that each club only be allowed to field two substitutes during a game instead of three as had been the NASL ruling.

By this time the League was well into its programme of encouraging the development of Canadian and American players and the number of foreign stars coming into the League dwindled.

After three dismal years Toronto Blizzard came to life during this season under new coach Bob Houghton. Houghton signed Swedish international goalkeeper Jan Moller, Northern Ireland international Jimmy Nicholl, perennial League star Ace Ntsoelengoe from Minnesota Kicks, and Liverpool's super-sub David Fairclough. Nicholl was particularly valuable to the Blizzard not only because of his extensive experience, but also because he had been born in Canada and thus qualified under the rule requiring each club to field at least four North American natives.

But it was the New York Cosmos who once again captured the Soccer Bowl, defeating Seattle Sounders 1-0.

If the game was still tied the outcome was decided by a shoot-out. No bonus points awarded for goals scored in overtime or the team shoot-out goal. Four points awarded for a shoot-out win.
